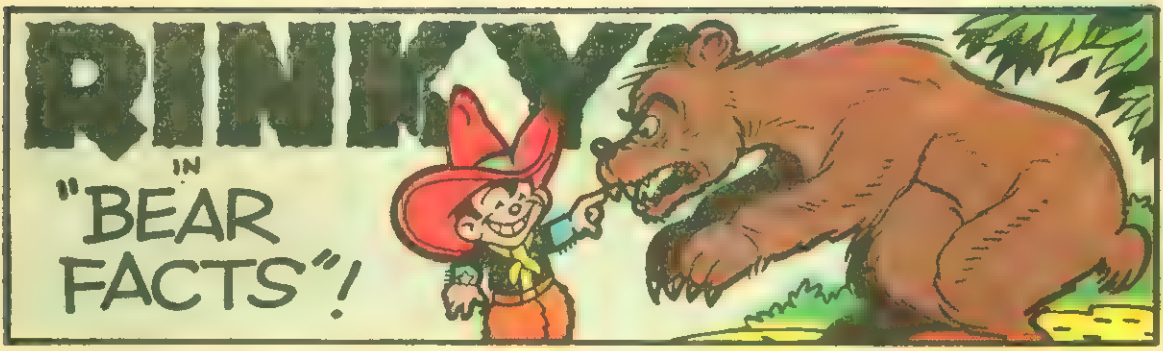
THE END



"Wait until you see the wonderful bear we have at our ranch, Thelma," exclaimed Rinky. "It belongs to Professor Kerchew. He's a friend of my father and he's going to put on a show with his trained dancing bear!"

"I'll ride right over with you, Rinky," said little Thelma Hawk. "I've never seen a dancing bear!"

Together they rode toward the Circle-O Ranch as quickly as their ponies could carry them.

"I haven't seen the bear yet, either. But her name is Trixie and she is very tame and friendly. Daddy told me just how an animal trainer handles animals. You have to be firm but gentle with them," Rinky said.

Just then Thelma shouted, "Oh, look! There's a bear near the Circle-O Ranch. It must be Trixie!"

"Come on, Thelma," Rinky replied. "I'll bring the bear right up to the ranch and make it do tricks. Won't Daddy and Professor Kerchew be surprised when they see me making Trixie do tricks!"

The little cowboy walked right up to the big bear and shouted, "Up, Trixie! Up!" Then he gently but firmly tapped the bear under the chin. Slowly the bear got up on its hind legs and let out a loud roar.

"That's wonderful, Rinky," said Thelma. When Rinky turned to say something to Thelma, all he could see was a cloud of dust as the girl raced toward the Circle-O Ranch.

Rinky poked the big bear firmly and soon he had it trotting toward the Circle-O. When they got to the front of the ranch house, Rinky coaxed the bear into standing on its hind legs. Then he knocked on the front door.

"Come on out, Daddy, and see how I can get Trixie to do tricks," shouted Rinky. The front door opened and his father smiled as he said, "I'm really surprised, Rinky. I had no idea you could handle animals so well. I'll go tell Professor Kerchew about it. He's in the barn fixing Trixie's cage."

Rinky watched as his father opened the barn door and looked inside. Then his father slid silently to the ground and didn't move.

Professor Kerchew came out of the barn and Rinky exclaimed, "What happened? Is Daddy sick?" But Professor Kerchew took one look at the big bear and he too settled quietly to the ground.

Just then, Thelma poked her head from the barn and shouted, "Run away from that bear, Rinky!"

Rinky frowned and said, "But Trixie won't hurt me!" Then he saw a little trained bear with a collar around its neck trot from the barn. Thelma said, "This little bear is Trixie!"

Rinky laughed and said, "Oh, no, Thelma! If that little bear is Professor Kerchew's Trixie, then that would mean that this big bear standing right here beside me is a mean, old, wild bear that might take a big bite out of me at any minute!"

Then Rinky stopped smiling. He looked at the big bear and let out the loudest shout ever heard on the Circle-O Ranch. Rinky's father and Professor Kerchew jumped up suddenly and they all watched in relief as the big bear scampered over a hill and out of sight.

"All is well that ends well," sighed the Professor. "But I hope that wild bear never comes back!"

"I just couldn't bear it!" shivered Rinky.
